I'm connected to Luther House in Corvallis and we have been working toward becoming a hub of resilience. This work connects to our core values of building communities around climate issues while serving surrounding communities with our resources.

Climate work can seem big and overwhelming sometimes, and when we focus our work on people and communities that are living through climate issues or emergency situations we gain a connection that is more personal and relatable and it can help dig into an issue that sometimes feels too big to tackle.

Luther House applied under the previous bill allocation and didn't get selected, and I'm excited to see another opportunity.
