Being able opt out of a law is a dangerous option for lawmakers to consider. While it may seem innocuous to some, adopting a measure such as this could potentially be used as precedent for another law. If a state statute is in need of change then it is up to the people of the state not the people of a lesser jurisdiction. If the legislature allows this to occur then all manner of laws will become ripe for county/city refusal to enforce or comply. I adamantly recommend opposing this legislation.
