I'm in support of common sense noise laws. Aftermarket exhaust is the go to way for extra power in anything with a combustion engine. Some of those exhaust systems are horrendous. I'm talking on all vehicles. I've had Harley's make me jump out of my seat practically, same with some of the rice burner cars. There is no reason for them to be that loud. I do very much support aftermarket exhaust and when done right, they sound really nice.

The noise disturbance laws were enacted by the people moving to our state and buying property on the sand dunes recreation area. The common statement is, if you don't want to hear airplane, don't buy a house by an airport. Pretty self explanatory right? The decibal limit for exhaust was predominately decided on the Yamaha banshee with aftermarket exhaust. It was so bad in those early years that if you had any kind of aftermarket exhaust on a banshee you were getting pulled over and cited. Mind you, the banshees were a lot more quiet than a Harley or a dozen other vehicles that were not under the same scrutiny.

Thank you for your consideration.
