It is only reasonable when a state has a law that damages the historic business of communities and livelihoods of community members then that state should compensate the business owner for the damages to their business. These laws protecting wolves which were not the ones native to our region originally to my understanding are an undue and needless burden to ranchers and herdsmen and even hobbies who enjoy livestock on their rural properties, If the liberals legislatures from the liberal did eof the state wan these illogical laws that are a detriment to the residents in the rural communities then the law makers need to pay for their liberal policies an compensate those who are damaged by those laws.
