

America's dirty divide

This article is more than 1 year old

Revealed: a toxic metal is in a US city's air – and may be harming children's brains

The Guardian finds children in Portland, Oregon, could have lower test scores due to lead emissions from nearby racetrack, one of dozens across the US to use toxic leaded gasoline

By Emma Pattee and Stuart Henigson in Portland, Oregon

