2. What functions, roles, or services does CP3 provide that have benefited or served ODHS, programs, communities, families, or other stakeholders/intended beneficiaries?

In my limited experience with CP3, I can see that CP3 has played a role to creatively solve issues. For example, through CP3, we have connected with ODHS family time unit to come up with transportation services to help with visitation time for families. Without CP3's ingenuity and persistence, ODHS wouldn't have this service as an option or idea.

3. What specific value or impact has CP3's work had on you, your organization, communities, or families being served?

They've given our program and business an opportunity to work with and give back to the community.

4. In your opinion, has CP3 contributed to bringing greater awareness to the needs of Child Welfare-involved youth and families to the community? Why or why not?

They certainly have brought greater awareness for myself and our business. Before CP3 reaching out to us, we had no idea that transportation could be a road block to family and visitation time and that visitation success often means reunification success.

I do not have the experience/involvement to speak for the community outside of our company.

5. Would you consider CP3's model/approach effective in bringing ODHS and community together to strengthen relationships, identify/address issues, and generate solutions in the context of the community? Why or why not?

Yes. The model is based on research. They find real problems and then work creatively to find real and proven solutions.

6. Would you say that the programs CP3 has helped to implement locally were designed based on documented data/research and community-informed needs assessments, and include measurable goals, strategies, actions, and timelines? Why or why not?

Yes. Based on the model and the experience we've had, all steps have been based on research and gathered data. All goals sets have been measurable and realistic.

7. Would you say that community members, partners, and program staff are meaningfully engaged by CP3 in all phases of the process (research, design, planning, implementation, and evaluation)? Why or why not?

Yes. CP3 encourages connection and cooperation. It is very clear especially as misunderstandings and hurdles arise.

8. Has CP3 provided the right level of support/direction as needed to effectively implement your program(s)?

Absolutely. Quick and clear communication are huge aspects of this.

9. Has your engagement with CP3 been a good use of your time and resources?

Yes! We are excited to be part of their network.

10. What methods/means/practices will help ensure that the impact of the programs CP3 has helped to implement are sustainable?

In the Family Time Transportation Pilot, we are still at the beginning so sustainability is going to be based on the research we all continue to gather and implementing changes to the pilot as needed.

11. In your opinion, where do you see limitations and/or opportunities for growth for CP3?

(i.e., non-profit structure/resources, public-private partnership, community engagement/collaboration, research implementation model, focus on family reunification, sustainability/expansion, etc.)

I am not knowledgeable enough to answer this question.

12. In your opinion, should ODHS continue to partner and invest in CP3? Why or why not?

Yes! From my perspective, CP3 is helping ODHS get out of their own/old ways of thinking and using resources/time that ODHS might not have to solve real problems for families and the community.

13. Any other feedback/questions related to current or future state of CP3?

Not at this time.
