Is it my mistake but don't the state and federal governments coordinate fire protection services already? Each forester could use his own rules for determining risk with the taxpayers footing the bill. And since when is it in the purview of foresters to determine negligence (6) on the part of another? This bill looks to me as a way to private parties to bill the state for services that are not needed as well as sue people they don't believe are managing their property correctly. Big time overkill to the current problem.
