I live in California but visit Oregon often, especially because of its natural beauty, landscapes, and wildlife. I support paying a few extra dollars on my hotel bill when I visit if it means supporting critical conservation programs that protect species, combat extinction, and safeguard Oregon's beauty. As someone who travels for work to different states, I recently realized the amount in Oregon is significantly less than other places. For this reason, it seems like a good opportunity for tourists to pay a little to protect the places we want to explore.
