Measure, Appointment or Topic: HB2995

Dear Members of the House Committee on Emergency Management, General Government, and Veterans,

It is beyond time that our country fully examine, reckon with and account for the harms and cruelty of slavery and I cannot fully express how passionate I am about supporting this bill. The trauma of the horrific violence committed against people who were enslaved has been passed down for generations, robbing their descendants of their humanity and generational wealth. Jim Crow laws and policy decisions, the militarization of police, the "war on drugs," and the era of mass incarceration since then have institutionalized racism, inequality, and discrimination, ensuring that Black people are subjected to continued injustice. My family has been in this country since 1641, and I can personally attest that my relatives enacted horror and brutality beyond words on Black people for centuries.

Not only is reparations for African Americans a moral imperative, there is long standing legal precedent for it. First, according to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (1969) and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1976), to which the U.S. is a party, people have the right to an effective remedy for human right violations committed against them, including racial discrimination. Second, under international human rights law (U.N. General Assembly Resolution 50/147 of 16, December 2005), governments have an obligation to provide effective remedies for violations of human rights; and victims, people who individually or collectively suffered harm, should receive full and effective reparations that are proportional to the gravity of the violation and the cumulative harm suffered. Third, in 1980, the U.S. Congress established a commission to investigate the forced relocation and internment in camps of Japanese Americans and others during World War II, which paved the way for a formal reckoning with these serious human rights abuses, including financial compensation to surviving victims.

As you may know, the state of Oregon never had slavery because we hated Black people that much, we didn't even want them in our state in any capacity. When they came anyway, the people in power did everything they could to keep them from existing. In Portland, the Vanport Flood destroyed a Black community and the effects are still felt to this day. Down here in Eugene in 1949, Lane County demolished Ferry Street Village - Eugene's first Black neighborhood - to build the Ferry Street Bridge.

According to international human rights standards (U.N. Human Rights Committee, General Comment No. 31, paras 15 et seq; Basic Principles), reparations may take many forms, such as restitution, compensation, rehabilitation, satisfaction, and/or guarantees of non-repetition. The Movement for Black Lives is calling for the following repairs for the Black community: (1) full and free access to lifetime education, (2) a guaranteed minimum livable income, (3) access to and control of food sources, housing, and land, (4) mandated public school curriculums that critically examine the political, economic, and social impacts of slavery, and (5) funding to support, build, preserve, and restore cultural assets and sacred sites. Clearly, there are several different ways that reparations can be provided to Black Oregonians.

African Americans in Oregon have never been compensated for the brutal and inhumane treatment they have endured throughout history and continue to suffer from today. Please pass HB 2995 so our state government can begin the long-overdue process of granting Black Oregonians the reparations they are owed.

Sincerely,
amanda ligon
