

February 27, 2025

TO: Oregon House Judiciary Committee

FROM: The National Family Violence Law Center at GW Law

RE: House Bill 3095 - Oppose

Esteemed Chair and Committee Members,

Thank you for the opportunity to provide testimony on HB 3095, on which we recommend a NO vote.

To frame the problems that HB 3095 presents, one must first consider the essential goal of child custody decisions – to ensure that the best interests of the child – not parents – are protected. HB 3095 would replace Oregon’s current child-centric model with a parent-entitlement model.

- Such a model is contrary to common sense child protection policies, out of step with the rest of the country, and not in children’s best interests.
- It would likely increase, not decrease custody litigation, which would be costly for families and create backlog in courts.¹
- It would deprive courts of necessary discretion in determining the best custody arrangement for each child’s unique needs and circumstances from the outset.
- It would be particularly damaging in families with a history or risk of abuse, and it would put countless at-risk Oregon children in the way of grave harm, and possibly death.

With HB 3095, each parent would automatically be granted shared custody regardless of past or present harms perpetrated by a parent against a family member, a lack of previous caregiving or involvement in the child’s life, a habitual use of illegal controlled substances, or other circumstances likely not in a child’s best interest.

HB 3095 shifts the evidentiary burden and cost onto the victim parent to prove that a 50/50 or approximate custody arrangement endangers a child in cases involving family violence or risk. Most victims do not have the financial means, power, and resources to do so. With HB 3095, a safe parent - oftentimes a domestic abuse victim suffering trauma, housing and income instability, and a variety of other challenges (which the domestic abuser is not facing) - would need to find the resources and representation to “outlitigate” her/her child’s abuser in order to keep her children safe and overcome the presumption of 50% custody to the abusive parent. The safe parent would need to prove child endangerment, which is a difficult standard to meet even for a parent who is not disadvantaged in some of these ways, before the court could begin its best interest analysis and move to put safeguards in place for the child.

¹ Brining, M. Does Parental Autonomy Require Equal Custody at Divorce? 65 LA. L. REV. 1345, 1368 (2005).
https://scholarship.law.nd.edu/law_faculty_scholarship/632/

There are reports of family violence in up to approximately 75% of contested custody cases, which is a disproportionately higher rate than in the average family in dissolution.² It has been found that custody courts frequently minimize valid claims of abuse in custody litigation due to a variety of reasons, including a reliance on outdated myths and tropes.³ Custody law does not apply to all divorcing families or families in dissolution, but only to those who litigate custody - about 10% of them overall. Most families in dissolution decide custody arrangements outside of court without litigating.

Studies have found that false allegations of abuse are rare and that most claims of child maltreatment are not fabricated. Those most likely to make fabricated claims of child maltreatment in the context of custody litigation are a non-custodial parent – mostly fathers.⁴ Creating a law which makes it more difficult for safe parents and vulnerable children to obtain a custody order which ensures their safety from further harm is ill-advised.

Currently courts can and frequently do award shared custody to each parent and nothing in Oregon law bars them from doing this. Nothing in current law allows for discrimination by courts for or against mothers or fathers. Oregon has a gender-neutral law which prioritizes the best interest of the child, as most states in the nation do and as has been the best policy and practice of family courts for decades.

Proponents of 50/50 presumption bills are misrepresenting court data. Each year, 50/50 presumption bills are put forward in states by an organization called the National Parents Organization, originally a father's rights organization, which makes questionable conclusions about available data.⁵ For example, their website states: "These [50/50] laws are overwhelmingly popular and have resulted in fewer contested divorces, fewer allegations of domestic violence, and better lives for Kentucky's children. NPO wants to replicate this success in every state in the Union." There is no basis for claiming such causality, as the Kentucky Administration for the Courts has made clear in the past. Proponents of shared parenting presumptions bills have relied ² See generally, Jaffe, Zerwer & Poisson, Access Denied: The Barriers of Violence & Poverty for Abused Women and their Children After Separation 1 (citing four studies, all of which found 70-75% of cases in litigation involved allegations of domestic violence).

³ Meier, Joan S., "Denial of Family Violence in Court: An Empirical Analysis and Path Forward For Family Law" (2021). GW Law Faculty Publications & Other Works. 1536 https://scholarship.law.gwu.edu/faculty_publications/1536; Epstein, Deborah and Goodman, Lisa A., "Discounting Women: Doubting Domestic Violence Survivors' Credibility and Dismissing Their Experiences" (2019). Georgetown Law Faculty Publications and Other Works. 2037. <https://scholarship.law.georgetown.edu/facpub/2037>

⁴ Trocmé, Nico and Bala, Nicholas. "False allegations of abuse and neglect when parents separate" Child Abuse & Neglect, Volume 29, Issue 12, 2005, Pages 1333-1345, ISSN 0145-2134, <https://doi.org/10.1016/j.chiabu.2004.06.016>. Study with a large sample found that in the context of custody only 12% of child maltreatment claims were fabricated.

⁵ Hale, M. (2019, August 30). Opinion: Kentucky's popular joint-custody law shows why it's the most effective at helping families. Courier Journal <https://www.courier-journal.com/story/opinion/2019/08/30/kentuckys-joint-custody-law-leads-decline-family-court-cases/2158216001/>

National Family Violence
Law Center

THE GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

heavily on distortions of data to mislead lawmakers in other states to try to garner support for such bills.

HB 3095 is not in the best interest of children. The rights of parents should never outweigh the protection and best interest of children. Please vote NO on this policy proposal.

Thank you kindly for your consideration and please do not hesitate to reach out if we can be of assistance.

Sincerely,

Danielle Pollack
Policy Manager, National Family Violence Law Center at GW
dpollack@law.gwu.edu