Oregon communities and ecosystems are still reeling from the immense havoc that the clearcutting wreaked on our lands during the 20th century. Allowing this bill to pass is a slap in the face of the hundreds of rural towns that are putting in active, communal effort to create sustainable solutions and reinvent their local economy to be in line with the local ecosystem rather than against it. I adamantly oppose this bill. Keep Oregon Wild. When the last tree is cut down, the last fish eaten, and the last stream poisoned, you will realize that you cannot eat money.
