Any student aware enough of the importance of school board elections should clearly be allowed to vote for that board, since their decisions will affect the student far more than it would affect voters who are out of school. And, imagine the lifelong lesson learned by the student in being able to control their own destiny, in some respects, by the simple expedient of voting.

Not allowing them to vote is simply furthering the message of autocracy. And we've already got far too much of that right now.
