This is a bad idea! Giving children whose undeveloped brains do not necessarily have the cognitive ability to comprehend what is good for their school districts would lead to bad decisions made in the schools. And a Lord of the Flies, student administrated school would not result in an education that would benefit society and the students. Also the teachers and their unions would have an undue influence on the students and would subvert the balance in the system. Students need to learn what they need to succeed, and not be put in charge of something that they, at their age, cannot comprehend the consequences of. This is bad legislation.
