To whom it may concern,

I don't believe 16 or 17 year olds have enough life skills to make appropriate decisions on things that will affect more than just themselves. I know parents who struggle with their 16 and 17 year-old to get off computers and games to even do normal life functions, such as wash dishes do your clothes go out and get a job. I think it's inappropriate to assume that they are all capable of making decision as I said prior that will affect more people than just themselves. It also feels like this is a stepping stone towards a do as we teach approach and not as your parents do or say. Totally against this proposal.
