Schools are number one not set up to provide nursing home level care by often untrained staff. Several staff have been injured by students, because kids are forced into classes where it is difficult for them to succeed and often interferes with the abilities of General education kids to learn. Resources are finite, meaning one child often takes the resources away from multiple children, through behaviors, or just level of care such as showering, changing etc. One such example would be a student who is not cognitively or physically able to do work, is not self ambulatory, yet is in a work training transition program. Wouldn't it make more sense not to waste resources on students that don't benefit from them? Education is supposed to be Individualized, yet its years and years of wasted pushing academic programs that don't work, instead of finding what the strengths of the students are such as art, music, p.e, ag, etc. They should not take away more money from gen Ed students, because in turn it hurts the sped students. The Gen Ed student's are more likely then not, going to be the future providers of our society. In a way they will become caretakers of people with special needs, so don't bite the hand that feeds you!
