I am a professional engineer working in the renewable energy space. Over the last 10 years I have done numerous design and financial reviews on renewable energy projects looking for grants and loans, etc. There is a reason that these projects take so long to complete. They are complex, touch many areas of the community and in many instances I have seen very inexperienced and incompetent people submit applications for review. Some of these applicants deserve to be rejected. In my opinion trying to force the EFSC to expedite a complex process will only result in disasters for the state, not to mention large financial losses for their investors.
