I've been involved with food pantries for over ten years, and during this time, I've seen firsthand how essential they are to our communities. We currently serve more than 70 individuals on a weekly basis, and the need continues to grow. In response to this, we've launched a new initiative called the "Food Justice." Our goal is not only to provide essential food items but also to educate and empower our community through Food Justice Workshops. These workshops are designed to support individuals in thriving, fostering both nourishment and knowledge for a stronger, more sustainable future.
