

Submitter:

Brett Barker

On Behalf Of:

Committee:

House Committee On Judiciary

Measure, Appointment or Topic:

HB3075

Hello,

Opposing stricter gun laws, such as limiting magazine capacities to 10 rounds, is crucial because these measures can impose significant economic burdens without clear evidence that they reduce crime or enhance public safety. Restrictions on magazine sizes do not address the root causes of violence, and there's no concrete data showing that such laws effectively prevent shootings. These policies can hurt the economy by negatively impacting the firearm industry, including manufacturers, retailers, and businesses that depend on a broad range of products and accessories. Additionally, law-abiding citizens, especially those who rely on firearms for self-defense or recreation, would face financial hardships due to the need to purchase new firearms or modify existing ones. Even further, the requirement for citizens to attend mandatory training or classes in order to purchase firearms or comply with new laws adds an extra financial strain, increasing the cost of ownership. Given that similar policies in other regions have not proven successful, these laws seem more focused on restricting personal freedoms than improving safety.

Thank you for your time,

Brett Barker