

I oppose House Bill 3076 because it lays the groundwork for unnecessary and burdensome regulations on law-abiding gun dealers. Oregon already has robust federal oversight through the ATF, and adding a state-level licensing program would duplicate efforts, increase costs, and potentially infringe on Second Amendment rights. Small businesses, especially rural dealers, could be hit hardest, facing added red tape without clear evidence that this would improve public safety. I urge lawmakers to focus on enforcing existing laws rather than creating new layers of bureaucracy.
