

March 18, 2025

Dear Co-Chairs Campos, Valderrama, and members of the Human Services SubCommittee of the Joint Ways and Means Committee,

My name is Margot Martin, CEO of Bradley Angle, the first domestic violence shelter on the West Coast, and I am submitting this testimony to urge your support of SB 5526, and particularly regarding the specialized programs that support survivors of gender-based violence and their children in the Department of Human Services Budget.

Bradley Angle is celebrating our 50th year of providing support to survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault, and are a culturally-specific organization that serves Black/African American survivors and their families, as well as LGBTQ2SIA+ survivors. In the last fiscal year, we supported 537 survivors and their families regain safety, stability, and hope after accessing our services.

The Department of Human Services provides critical safety net services and programs that can quite literally save the lives of survivors and their children fleeing violence and seeking safety and security. Temporary Assistance to Domestic Violence Survivors (TA-DVS), Co-Located Domestic Violence Advocates, and the Survivor Investment Partnership are of the utmost importance in these times of crisis. We urge the Committee to prioritize the stability and flexibility of these programs.

Gender-based violence is a major public health problem nationally and in Oregon. From 2009 through 2019, Oregon's Statewide Domestic Violence Fatality Review Team identified a total of 393 fatal domestic violence incidents that resulted in 532 deaths. Children witnessed violence in nearly 1 in 4 (22%) intimate partner violence cases filed in state courts.

Despite the clear and documented need, there are far too few prevention resources available for victims. In 2024, 88% of requests for emergency shelter and transitional housing by domestic violence survivors in Oregon went unmet, due to lack of resources, indicating a significant resource gap. A recent study indicated that domestic violence was the cause for 49% of women experiencing homelessness in Oregon and Washington.

Against the above backdrop, the three programs outlined below are of critical importance to the lives of survivors and their children.

The TA-DVS program has saved lives: Victims fleeing abuse at home face many barriers to safety, and the shelter system is unable to address all of these barriers. The TA-DVS program can provide a crucial first step through those barriers for many victims and their children. Safe separation from an abusive partner often requires relocation, lock changes, and other security measures. Victims may be forced to leave all of their personal belongings behind in the crisis. Many survivors simply do not have the resources required to surmount these obstacles for themselves and their children. When other resources are not available, TA-DVS funds can be a critical safety support, enabling victims to get into safe housing and to protect themselves and their children from further violence.

The Co-Located Domestic Violence Advocate program is critical to supporting effective intervention and connecting survivors to longer term support Structures. DV advocates co-located at child welfare and self sufficiency offices help case workers assess risk factors and protective measures more effectively, leading to better-informed case decisions that prioritize child safety without unnecessarily separating families.

Survivors of domestic violence are often hesitant to engage with state workers due to fears of losing custody. Co-located advocates provide confidential, survivor-centered support, making it more likely that victims will seek help and stay engaged in safety planning.

The Survivor Investment Partnership (SIP) is of particular importance to ensuring access to culturally specific services for survivors: SIP seeks to expand the reach of advocacy services to survivors across Oregon, including Tribal communities and individuals without children, ensuring that vulnerable populations have access to the support they need. By providing meaningful financial assistance, SIP empowers survivors to make decisions that best support their safety and stability. This autonomy enables survivors to address their unique needs effectively. SIP partners with the Nine Federally Recognized Tribes of Oregon, culturally responsive providers, and co-located advocacy agencies to deliver services tailored to the cultural contexts of survivors, thereby improving engagement and outcomes. By focusing on increasing accessibility, providing financial support, and offering culturally responsive services, SIP aligns with best practices in supporting survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault.

Thank you for supporting all survivors in Oregon, acknowledging that many survivors hold a multitude of oppressed identities, and that our work is being threatened at the Federal level. We appreciate your commitment and dedication to our work.

Best,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Margot Martin', with a stylized flourish at the end.

Margot Martin (she/her)
CEO