Statement of Kent Gross in support of House Bill 3007

Dear Members of the House Committee on Education:

HB 3007 will help students recovering from brain injuries by requiring schools to provide appropriate, person-centered, academic, behavioral, social, emotional, and physical accommodations to ensure the student has the best possible recovery.

No student ever wants to suffer a brain injury, but many still do. During their recovery, they will struggle with their classwork, their social interactions, their mental and behavioral health, and their physical pain. The last thing a school should do is make it harder for the student to recover.

HB 3007 requires a school to act in the student's best interest and give them the accommodations they need during their brain injury recovery. If they need help with classwork, homework, or with their friends, the school should be assisting because of their brain injury. They should also get those accommodations if they need physical accommodations in their classrooms because of the lights, the noises, or whatever.

HB 3007 Will help ensure that students recovering from brain injuries get the accommodations they need. Please support HB 3007

Thank you.

Signed,
