HB3076

When I first read HB 3076 I thought it simply as waste of time and money since the Federal government already requires licensing. After reading the -1 amendment, I'm even more confused. I'm trying to think of another license that is required at both the State and Federal level. It seems to be a solution in search of a problem and it will direct an agency that is already underfunded to take on more work. The testing requirements seem awfully specific. Where did they come from? The federal requirements? If so, again, why are we being redundant? It is going to cost each business who sells ammunition a fortune to comply with the rules in this amendment. Again, is this a solution in search of a problem? If dealers were experiencing ammo theft, I feel like they would go the route of stores who lock up basic things like razors or batteries. In the end, I feel this bill will just add another unnecessary layer of bureaucracy and liability to firearm dealers.
