I live near 4 schools and 3 day care centers and despite being a lawful firearms owner I will not be able to navigate my neighborhood without running afoul of the law. This would more or less force me to move, which... in this economy?

If the state is concerned about gun violence, I'd rather it focuses its efforts on root cause mitigation (homelessness, drug abuse, income inequality). It should be noted that a law like this could be appealed and eventually make its way to the Supreme Court of the United States, which will mean it's eventually struck down.
