I've been told that we need to 'find common ground' with those we disagree with so we can work together to make America a better place. I figured I'd just get the things we do NOT agree about out of the way first...

If you believe America is a racist country, we do NOT have that in common.
If you believe it's ok to teach sex and gender dysphoria to K-12 children, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe it's ok for millions of people (fleeing TO a better economic situation) to illegally enter our country, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that you can create gun laws that criminals will obey, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that murdering the unborn is an acceptable form of contraception for the irresponsible, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that eliminating affordable energy will enable you to tell the planet's climate what to do, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that anyone should be able to infringe on a person's 1st Amendment rights based on their definition of 'disinformation', we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe our country should guarantee equal outcomes instead of equal opportunity, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that color of skin is more important than ability and content of character, we do NOT have that in common.

If you are not grateful and proud to be an American, we do NOT have that in common.

If it makes you feel virtuous to steal from some to give to others, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that law enforcement exists to oppress rather than protect, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that 'science' cannot be questioned, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe men can get pregnant, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe government exists to rule instead of serve, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that our government should be able to pile debt on future generations and not have to balance its budget, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that it's appropriate to call violent PEOPLE 'gun violence', we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that TV, print, and social media is not biased, we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe that our own citizens should not come before spending blood and treasure on a 'new world order', we do NOT have that in common.

If you believe being 'woke' is actually doing anything that will benefit the majority of citizens in this country, we do NOT have that in common.

Regrettably, there's more. Lots more. I guess we have being human beings living in the same geographical area in common...
