I think we need strong local production and distribution of food independently and free from corporate greed and waste. Micro-farming, food gardens, neighborhood co-ops and food pantries, reclamation of and healing of our land from paved over urban sprawl to produce healthful food in an eco-friendly and sustainable manner should be the proudly resilient Oregon way and moving to a care economy (e.g. 4 day work week, UBI, higher minimum wage, stronger unions, paid sick leave and family leave along with other time off, Medicare for All, equity of college opportunity, guaranteed school lunch and breakfast, transit justice, affordable housing etc.) where we're better able to civically engage to become better stewards of our communities and foster better society should be a major priority.
