Being a good steward of the land you live on should be a no-brainer, but I don't believe it should be a constitutional amendment.

there was once a time that all Americans agreed on certain behaviors and what is right and wrong.

In Oregon we agree that we shouldn't waste clean water but we don't have a rule on it. I mean look at people with food stamps who buy water bottles and then go outside and dump the water out so the can return the bottles for deposit money. If Oregon was really concerned about waste then they would make this process illegal or enforce the rules on this form of waste.

As Oregonians we should all evaluate ourselves and make sure we are being responsible Oregonians, but to make it a fundamental right goes too far.
