The very idea of abolishing by-mail voting is an obvious attack against both working people- who may not be available during standard polling hours- and the disabled - who may not be physically capable of waiting in line-, as well as the very concept of informed decision making. I have cast my every vote, seated at my kitchen table, with my ballot on one side and the other side being a stack of information regarding candidates and measures.

To even consider denying that right is unreasonable to a point bordering on outright cruelty.
