Vote by mail is an excellent system, with no significant issues that would affect the outcome of any election. It allows all of us who are overwhelmed by busy work schedules and endless financial and bureaucratic stresses to have one less thing to worry about - having to show up the day of election (or otherwise waste more time proving that we can't) to fulfill our role in our democracy. I noticed that there's no provision here to make voting day a holiday despite it being so extremely important. Who does this actually serve? Certainly not the common voter.
