With universal mail-in voting I am better informed on the issues and I am making better choices. By having the ballot in front of me while I am doing my investigations into each issue, even investigating as I vote each item, I find I am more thorough in my reading, consideration and final selections.

Also, since each ballot envelope is registered to an individual from the beginning, and tracked through to counting, the opportunity for issues is greatly reduced, and I have much more confidence in the results, as well as the receipt and count of my individual votes.

Having experienced mandatory in-person voting in the past, I very much appreciate the universal mail-in voting for these reasons (though I prefer to use an official secure drop box, so the USPS doesn't mis-place it, or make it late).
