There's no good reason to repeal our mail in ballot system. It allows Oregonians to sit down with our ballots and truly research every candidate and ballot measure. It's easy for workers to submit their votes, as well as people with disabilities who may struggle with those multi-hour lines some states contend with. It has a solid paper trail that can be audited, unlike a lot of those electronic voting machines, and is quite budget conscious.

If it's supposedly due to concerns about election fraud, I'd challenge whoever's making that claim to supply proof. And that proof had better be iron clad and statistically significant to the outcome of elections.

Oregon voters voted universal vote by mail into existence by an overwhelming majority and have since been among the most democratically represented in the country, as measured by voter turn out. Trying to overturn our will on the ballot via a senate bill is shameful and backhanded.

Want to repeal what we voted for? Get it put on the ballot.
