Mail-in voting augments the representation of all the voters of the state by eliminating some of the barriers to actually voting.

To any arguments that it is untrustworthy, I have absolutely no evidence of truth to that idea. Signatures and other means to validate a m-ailed-in vote can be in place and thereby assure the election is fair. In-person voting creates barriers to too many voters and leaves our elections' outcomes shoddy and non-representative of the will of the people.
