I wholeheartedly support this! Allowing mail-in voting opens the door to widespread voter fraud, creating a system that is far too easy to manipulate. When we remove the safeguards of in-person voting, we compromise the very foundation of our democracy. Without proper oversight, ballots can be lost, altered, or even cast illegally, threatening the integrity of our elections. In-person voting on Election Day ensures that only eligible citizens are casting their votes, with proper identification and verification processes in place. It's the only way to guarantee that every vote counted is legitimate and secure.

The stakes couldn't be higher. If we continue down the path of unrestricted mail-in voting, we risk losing the trust of the American people in our electoral system. A fair democracy relies on confidence in the process, and that confidence is shattered when we introduce vulnerabilities that can be exploited. Election results should never be in doubt due to questionable ballots or lack of accountability. We must stand firm in protecting the sanctity of our elections by prioritizing secure, in-person voting—ensuring that every legal vote is counted and every election is conducted with the highest level of integrity.
