SB210

In a democracy, voting is in the public interest. The state and its populace have an interest in protecting and promoting voting. Securing the process against fraud is important, but not important enough to inhibit voter participation. Without evidence that vote-by-mail has supported fraudulent elections, measures aimed at preventing fraud by ending vote-by-mail are solutions in search of a problem. Such laws can only create difficulties. They are worthless. Conservatives should know this. It's what they constantly complain about, as a matter of fact. Vote NO on 219, please.
