Vote by mail upholds the basic tenants of our democracy by making the vote, and therefore the opinion of the governed, more accessible to all. It is proven to work both on a logistical level by having negligible fraud, and on a fundamental level by increasing voter turnout in areas where it is available. Personally I would have struggled to vote this year as I was home caring for a post-partem wife and a newborn baby. Sharing my needs via the vote for the future of our government has never felt more pressing as I brought a child into the world, and I think it would be strikingly wrong to arbitrarily silence those who can't make it to a poling station. Conduct the election over mail.
