Mail-in voting has many advantages as compared with in-person voting:

Main-in voting has very little fraud. The Heritage Foundation identified only 14 cases of attempted mail fraud in more than 15 million ballots in Oregon.

Voter participation is increased by mail-in voting. Stanford University researchers showed that voting turnout increased by 2% in states that used some sort of mail-in voting.

Voters have more time to read about candidates and issues and decide how to vote. There is no need for poll workers or voting sites.
