Dear Senate, I did not think that the mail in ballot system was broken or bad. A lot of states have had more problems than Oregon. I would not mind if eventually became an online system with the security level of crypto-currency and had built in redundancy so that it double checked several secure data bases automatically. But for the time being, I would prefer that it be left alone until other states achieve the high standard that it represents. My concern is that a sincere effort to reform the voting system needs to be at a time when there is a more bipartisan spirit, rather than what looks like one party trying to dominate or eliminate the other party and whose leader on record said that he promised to cheat in 2020 (and added "so you may as well give up now" and even lost while trying to cheat). I am concerned in this time period that any measures to change the system now may introduce vote rigging which has not been a problem before. In short, "If it ain't broke don't fix it". And get those sorting machines back. Blessings, Will
