I was so horrified to find out that the State Senate is considering disallowing mail-in voting in Oregon. This is a true strength of our state and allows so many more categories of people (the disabled, seniors, and those with limited transportation, etc.) to participate in public decision-making. When voting rights are threatened in so many places in our country, we should be especially careful that we do not fall victim to the fallacy (consistently disproven) that mail-in voting is inherently open to fraud. Oregon's experience has consistently proved otherwise.
