Returning to in-person voting on the day of the election would be taking a huge step backwards. Our mail-in voting system gives every registered voter equal access to participate in democracy. We have the system in place and it works. I cannot think of a single reason to return to a practice that is outdated and labor-intensive, except that there is a goal to reduce access to voting. There is no proof of voting fraud that has made a difference in any election. We must preserve our current mail voting system.
