To whom it may concern,

I am against requiring Oregonians to have to show up in person to vote. Our current system is working great. We get the ballot in the mail, have time before it's due to research and look up candidates from the comfort of our home to make informed decisions. We then mail in the ballot before the due date and don't have to miss any work or get childcare.

Requiring people to vote in person would prove hardship to those that aren't given time off work, don't have someone to watch their children, rely on public transit, have health conditions or disabilities that make it hard for them to get around, or don't live near a polling place. With mail-in voting these types of barriers are removed for Oregonians and allow more of us to participate and have our voice heard.
