Until the day comes where it is show that voting my mail is mostly made up of so many fraudulent votes that it changes the outcome of that election, then why is anyone asking for it to be changed? It seems to me that whomever it is that's putting this up for consideration isn't using their heads very well or just doesn't have the critical thinking skills to see beyond what this can do to the state. For starters, if you start requiring people to show up to the voting both to vote then you'd better have enough locations throughout the state to accommodate what your considering, and I'm not talking about one location for every 1 million voters. Second, I believe the cost of turning it back to the way that it was prior to 1987 would exceed continuing with the mail in votes. Finally, I see this as just another one of the tacky tricks from the right, which was initially caused by Trump saying the 2020 election was stolen...WHICH IT WASN'T. If something is working for the majority, leave it alone.
