

To Whom It May Concern,

I support in-person voting. As a young, independent voter, my wife and I vote according to our conscience and the values we believe reflect American and Oregon values, rather than adhering to a specific party line.

Given the long-standing debate around vote by mail, transitioning to in-person voting should not alter election outcomes if our policy decisions genuinely resonate with the public. However, if vote by mail has created loopholes that unfairly favor one party, then we are not upholding American or Oregon values. Continuing with a policy that is known to skew results would mean we are no longer deserving of this great state.

Sincerely,
James
