SB210

While living in Nevada during my undergraduate studies I participated in the great tradition of in-person voting and while it was a fun thing to do once, it was only feasible for me because it occurred on our campus and I was given time off work at my on-campus employment to vote. Now, I work as a social worker in rural Oregon where my schedule is full of on-call crises that can arise at any time. Beyond the matter of scheduling conflicts that may make it difficult to make it to the polls for myself and many other Oregonians, mail in ballots also afford me the opportunity to sit down in my own home and research thoroughly the decisions that I am making before I cast my vote. I am against changing what has been such a helpful and effective system in Oregon.
