I am disabled, and have been for several years. Right now, I could not stand or sit long enough to wait in a line to vote in person, and countless others share this position. Our voting records have been secure and accurate for all of my voting lifetime, despite the propaganda and lies offered by some. The greatest danger I can recall from any election came in the form of destruction of a ballot box done by someone from outside the state, and the actual damage was very minimal, and quickly checked. The costs of setting polling places, regulating them, and staffing them before counts is frivolous and needless, and the confusion of switching patterns cannot outweigh the vague and undefined benefits of removing the mail in standard.
