It is asinine to think we would change a voting system that works so well just to appease language that already contradicts itself. To prove you have citizenship at the time of the vote in person makes it inherently more difficult to actually exercise our right to vote. You need citizenship to register to vote, which makes this bill a blatant redundancy to push out voters who would otherwise be able to vote by mail. Our mail in voting system does not give an advantage or disadvantage to any certain candidate, and a change is unwarranted. I would go as far as to argue that our mail-in voting system makes it easier, fair, safer, and more accessible to anyone who chooses to vote and should be implemented in every state.
