

Submitter:

Cris Chappelle

On Behalf Of:

Committee:

Senate Committee On Rules

Measure, Appointment or Topic:

SB210

I joined the military right out of high school, and then ended up back in Or. when I ETS'd, so I've been voting by mail my entire adult life. It works, and it works well. And as we like to say in the service, 'If It's Not Broke, Don't Fix It'. Not only was it the only option for me when I was overseas, but it's the best option for people with mobility problems, family-care issues, those that cannot take time from work (since the US doesn't have a federal day for that, hmmm weird) or folks in areas without transportation options. And what about the lines? If we lost mail-in ballots would there suddenly be enough polling that people wouldn't have to wait for hours on end? would the time be paid? and again, what about the folks with family-care and transportation issues? how would all of these suddenly be addressed, since these are literally the problems that mail-in ballots solved?

So now let's look at the truth of the matter: that this is nothing but a pathetic ploy by a bunch of cowardly cultists to make it impossible for a chunk of the population to vote so the party in power can keep it. Because then...

"The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing."