

Submitter: Lisa Payne
On Behalf Of:
Committee: Senate Committee On Rules
Measure, Appointment or Topic: SB210

Stop trying to make it harder to vote.

There's no significant amount of fraud with mail in voting (there will always be a small amount no matter what method is used.) There's maybe a few hundred people with a warped perception of reality suffering from cognitive dissonance who have convinced themselves it isn't secure enough or too flawed of a system. The rest of us can't believe you're wasting our tax dollars and time with this BS.

We see the inequities of these voting practices in other states - working families, single parents, people with disabilities, etc. have barriers to getting to polling stations and standing in lines for long hours. Voting day is a TUESDAY. Most people have to work, it's not a national holiday, and even if it was, many people (especially of the lower class) would still be obligated to work.

Honestly, I'm surprised we aren't moving toward online voting. If I can bank online, do my taxes online, apply for college online using my SSN, why can't we figure out a secure system for voting?

Stop trying to go back in time, we're in the age of technology; if you want to change the method of voting - be innovative. If you can't do that, then you're obsolete and your constituents will vote for an up to date model.