Mail in voting means that I can take my time researching candidates and measures as I fill out the ballot, and I don't have to take time off work to stand in line to vote.

Mail in voting empowers people who are sick, lack reliable transportation, lack childcare, can't take time off work, aren't physically able to stand in line for hours, or for whatever other reason aren't able to show up in person on a single day to make sure their voices are still heard.

Removing mail in voting would disproportionately impact people of color, poor people, disabled people, single parents, the elderly, and the working class.
