Why ignore 40 years of successful voting practices to return to over-worked elections workers having to process ballots from voters who have had to interrupt their day to stand in line in every type of weather just to satisfy a disproven myth about nonexistent voter fraud?

It's absurd to even consider this bill. How cost effective is it to hire the additional processors for a one day workout? Certainly, with the volume of voters it would be a massive challenge to get all the ballots processed within the allotted time that the polls are open.

This bill is based on a nonexistent problem and is not worth further consideration.
