

Submitter:

Cory Allen

On Behalf Of:

Committee:

Senate Committee On Rules

Measure, Appointment or Topic:

SB210

I have experienced both in-person and mail-in voting, and mail-in voting is far superior. It affords the opportunity to properly research and make a more informed decision, and makes voting far more accessible and convenient. Literally no downside, unless you consider increased participation of an informed electorate to be a bad thing, which I suspect a particular party currently supporting a fascistic administration does. They have brought shame to our country and anyone still calling themselves a Republican has lost all credibility and respect from people who actually take the time to learn the verifiable facts about the issues.