Mail-in voting is essential to our way of life as Oregonians. Reverting to in-person voting would only serve to suppress the votes of people who are unable to physically travel to the polls on election day. This would disproportionality affect disabled people, people who cannot afford to take time off work, people without reliable transportation, and people in rural areas who would need to travel greater distances to their polling places. Any imagined benefits are easily outweighed by these immense, obvious drawbacks. Voting must remain free, safe, and accessible.
